What This Talk Is

1. Lots of Bots, Taxonomised (ish)

2. Ethics, Rules, Guidelines

3. What Twitter Bots Could Be

The Generation Game

Most of the bots in this talk are 'first generation' Twitterbots.

Different Twitterbots perform different functions in society.

We'll be looking at why (I think) different people like different kinds of bot as we go along.

How to Be Calm

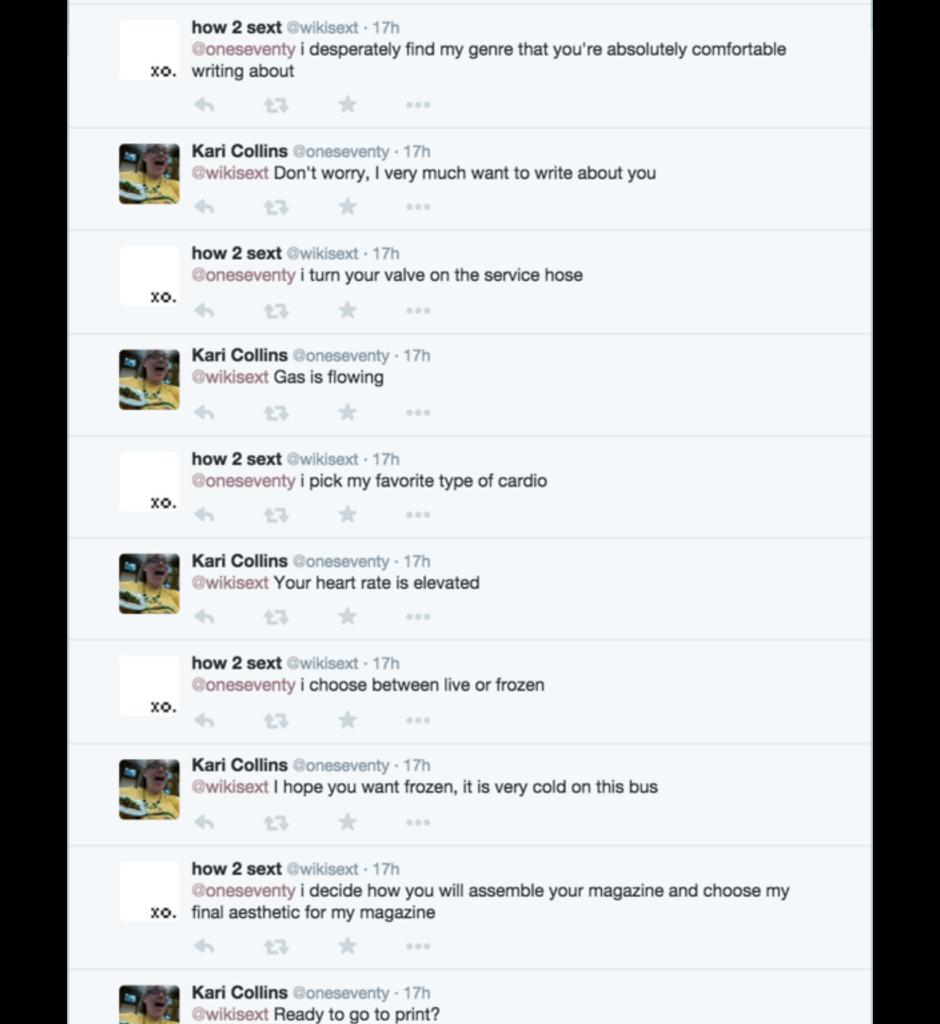

Three Parts: ■ Changing Your Outlook ■ Changing Your Behavior ■ Calming Techniques

Most of us can become more calm than we are today. Calm people are happier and help others to be more calm. You probably have been grateful to someone else who was calm when you were in a crisis. Some ideas include nutrition, exercise, meditation, enjoying solitude or even aromatherapy. Try whichever of these ideas sound good to you, and you may find yourself a calmer, happier person. You can do it, so why not give it a go!

Part 1 of 3: Changing Your Outlook

Be kind to yourself. Being calm begins with being self-loving (which does not mean being self-absorbed). It's all too commonplace for us to take a negative tone with ourselves and to be our own unkindest critic. Calm cannot settle when you feel nothing but self-criticism, self-loathing and a lack of self-trust; if these are your main

Twitter bots grow up and take on the world

- 04 August 2014 by Aviva Rutkin
-) Magazine issue 2980. Subscribe and save

Automated Twitter accounts are now keeping tabs on politicians, watching for earthquakes and even composing poetry

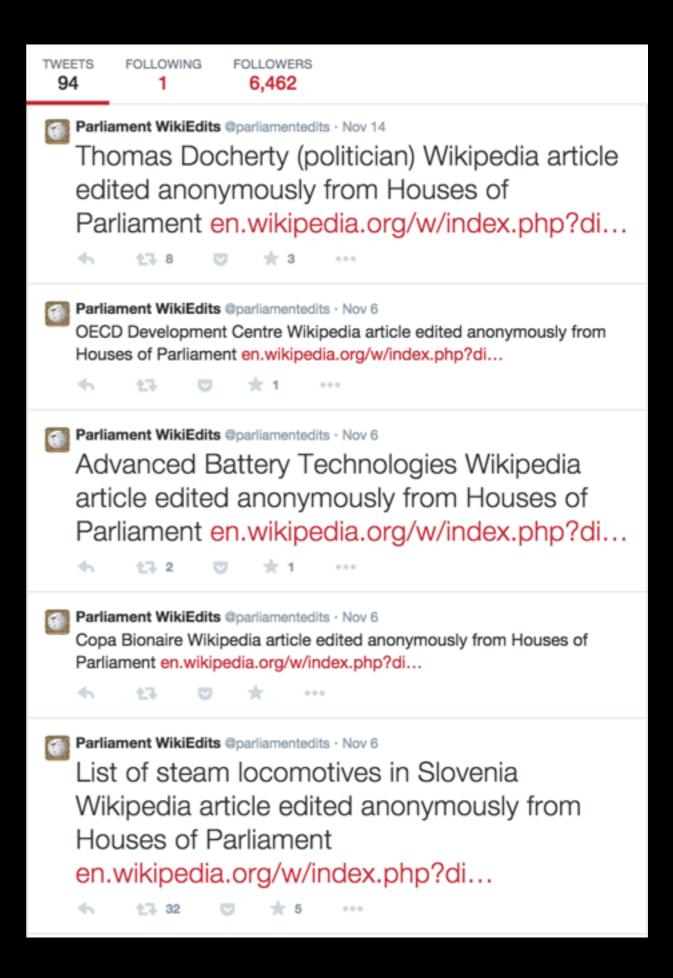

ON 18 July, someone in the Russian government edited Wikipedia. They opened up an article titled "List of aircraft accidents in civil aviation" and scrolled down to the entry about MH17, the Malaysia Airlines flight that had been shot down just the day before. At the time, the article blamed terrorists from Russia. The government official deleted that passage, instead pointing the finger at the Ukrainian military for the accident. How do we know this? A Twitter bot caught him in the act.

Twitter bots are programs designed to spew out tweets according to a particular algorithm. Twitter itself estimates about 1 in 20 of its accounts is not human (see "Bot or Not?"). Bots are notorious for stirring up trouble –they are often used to try to sway political discussions or stock prices, say. Publications, companies or wannabe celebrities can buy fake followers to make themselves look more popular.

Lots of bots focus on quantity over quality (to some degree)

There's an element of serendipity to following bots and discovering tweets.

For (some) Twitterbots, the volume of tweets and scarcity of truly surprising and great tweets are aesthetics.

Metaphor Magnet uses intelligent databases of source material, and tries to curate itself to find good metaphors.

Both approaches are okay!

(But this week is mostly about the latter)

How can we build bots that curate themselves?

Could you write a curator companion to your favourite bot?

DRUIDS, vegans and green activists should be given special treatment at work, according to 'lunatic' advice from the equalities watchdog.

The Equality and Human Rights Com-mission (EHRC) warns employers that they risk 'potentially costly legal action' unless they allow staff to follow their 'reli-gion or belief rights' in the workplace.

This could include giving believers time off to go on pilgrimages, such as druids and pagans going to Stonehenge, while environ-mentalists should be free to lecture other staff about their car use. Vegetarian kitchen workers could refuse to do tasks that offend their beliefs, such han-dling meat. Critics say that by the same logic vegans could refuse to work in an office furushed with leather chairs.

Even atheists should have their beliefs respected, according to the new guidance. It has been issued in the wake of the land-mark European Court of Human Rights ruling that Christians may wear a cross at

But rather than focusing on Christian rights in the workplace – which it insists are still in the wormpace – which it misses are still strictly limited – the controversial quango suggests employers should give equal respect to fringe and non-religious groups. The guidance is likely to be seen as an insult by some Christians and other religious observ-

Thousands in rush to avoid new benefit test

DISABILITY benefit claims have more than doubled in some parts of the country as thousands rush to avoid tough new medical tests, Iain Duncan Smith daims today.

The Work and Pensions Sec-retary said it showed why he had been right to reform a 'ridiculous' system supported by Labour which saw the number claiming soar to 3.2million, costing taxpayers more than £13billion a year.

In an interview with the Daily Mall, he accused Labour of writing an 'C80billion suidde note' by opposing every ele-ment of the Government's programme to rein in the bloated welfare budget. Official figures suggest that 7l per cent of those being paid the old disability living allowance got the benefit 'without systematic checks'.

Building bot 'companions' to existing bots gives you readymade inspiration!

It also begins to build up creative networks

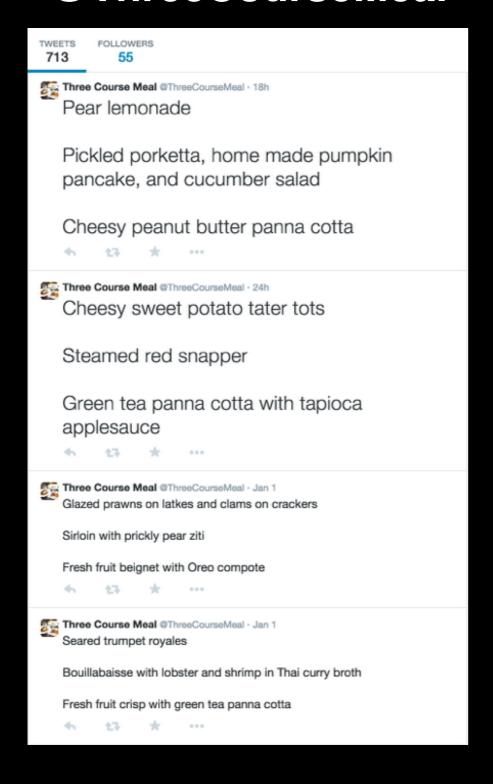

- bots as input and output channels, curators and critics.

Plus, it's nice! (#botALLY)

"Someone should make a bot..."

@ThreeCourseMeal

@GreatBottishBakeOff

Judges meals for their balance of flavours, gives scores and sarcastic/witty criticism.

@HouseBotdeaux

Suggests wines to go with particular meals, (perhaps with amusing descriptions of their flavour).

@LesBotsHeureux

Generates fancy names for each course, with appropriately fancy descriptions of the dishes.

Build a network with people in this room!

Black Box Bots

Consider building bots which are functional

Bots which give regularly-formatted output, or take special kinds of input, can be used by anyone!

This encourages other botmakers to join in with the building of creative bot communities!

Consider building bots which are functional

@-messages become requests from a particular user.

Accept #hashtags as a way of setting options or parameters for the bot.

Bots can still be independent and take requests - but watch your rate limits.
